JUDGMENT

This is a petition in respect of a family grave in Wandsworth Cemetery. The grave will accommodate four coffin burials.

It was used for three coffin burials in 1972, 1973 and 1977 respectively; and then for the interment of cremated remains in 1990.

As matters stand, the interment of cremated remains in 1990 prevents a further coffin burial. However if the ashes are disinterred, a further coffin burial is possible; it would then be possible to re-inter the ashes in the same grave. The re-interment of the ashes could take place on the same day as the coffin burial, and this is proposed.

Although human remains should never be disturbed without good cause, I do not think that, where they are to be reinterred after a short interval in circumstances like the present, the full force of the principle of exceptionality articulated in In re Blagdon Cemetery applies. However Blagdon makes clear that the principle of family solidarity is to be encouraged; as is economy in the use of grave space. This seems to me an appropriate case in which a faculty for disinterment of the ashes should issue; the faculty will be subject to a condition that they should be re-interred within a period of three months in the same grave. I allow a period of three months just in case, in the event, there are any complications in this happening on the same day as the burial.
